In the middle of the twentieth century, many African Americans were kept out of many things. Especially in the southern states, black people were kept separate and apart from white people. In restaurants, black people were told to sit in a separate section, or (1) often they weren't allowed in at all. Black children went to separate schools from white children. There were even separate drinking fountains for white people and black people.

This separating of people just because of their skin color is called "segregation" Segregation is wrong. $_{(2)}$ It's just about as far from the idea that "all men are created equal" as you can get.

In 1955, even the buses in southern states were segregated. If you were white, you could sit in the front. If you were black, (1), or give up your seat to a white person if there were no empty seats left.

One day in 1955, black woman named Rosa Parks got on a bus in Montgomery, Alabama. She had worked hard all day and (2). She sat down in a seat at the back of the bus. But later the bus got crowded and all the seats in the white section were filled. Well, the next time the bus stopped, a white man got on, and the bus driver told Rosa Parks to get up and give her seat to the white man.

(3). She was not going to move, even if the law said she should move. It was a bad, stupid law. Still, it was a law. And so she was arrested.

When people heard that Rosa Parks had been arrested, (4). African Americans in the city of Montgomery decided that they would stop riding the buses. They would walk or share riders in cars. But they would not pay the bus company to ride as long as the company practiced segregation.

For a whole year, African Americans refused to ride the buses in Montgomery. This became known as the Montgomery Bus Boycott. (To "boycott" is to refuse to buy or use something.)

A little more than a year Rosa Parks was arrested, the highest court in the United States, the Supreme Court, said that she was right and Alabama law was wrong. (5)
