VII. 次の英文を精読し、下記の設問に答えよ。

Some people say that television is the greatest invention of the 20th century. Others claim it is a drain on valuable time, an evil influence on the nation. There are those who (A) television for teaching violence and inviting young viewers to imitate criminals and gun-slinging heroes. There are those who say that TV turns people into passive vegetables (B) and watch the tube. Still others see television as history's most effective educator, bringing the wonders and knowledge of the world into the homes of even the (C) citizens. Such education, they point out, was once available only to the very (D) who could afford travel and the best schools. Children today seem to know much more about the world than their parents and grandparents (E) at the same age.

When asked for their opinion of television, some answer that TV is a harmless pastime that provides an escape from the troubles of daily life; (F) others argue that it presents a dangerously unreal picture of the world. The arguments rage on, and for every convincing statement about the harmless of TV there is an equally compelling argument about its benefits. Television is a controversial subject — but one on which everyone must take a stand. That glass-windowed box sitting in almost every household in the land demands a daily decision. To watch or not to watch, that is the decision. And each time that decision is made, a person reveals what values are important.

*controversial: 議論の余地のある
